

Poetry Society of Texas - Gulf Coast Poets Chapter
Barnes & Noble Bookstore (1029 W. Bay Area Blvd.)
Saturday - June 11, 2011, 10:30

Featured Speaker
Daniel Carrington, Jr.

Daniel Carrington was born in Beaumont, Texas and has been a resident of the greater Houston area since high school. A graduate of Texas A&M University, he is an architect by day. By night though, he continues to indulge his passion for poetry that stretches back to those formative high school years. He was selected as a juried poet for the 2010 Houston Poetry Fest. Currently putting together his 2011 submission, he continues to work on new material with the goal of producing his first chapbook in the not-too-distant future.

MEMBER POEM, JUNE 2011

DAVID E. COWEN

Father Sextant's Sermon on the Mount

"blessed are the children," he reads,
then pauses,
his pale cheeks
gleaming red
in the black smoke of the candles.
he stares down
at the late comers
points his finger,
bent and twisted with arthritis,
as they excuse themselves
down the pew to the last open spaces,
and he screams
as the flustered few fumble to find a weekly missal,
"next time I am going to lock the doors at eleven and you'll just have to do without God for a week,"
they kneel and pray
knowing the anger of their God

Heart-Bound a La Linea

Escaping into the darkness of night—no longer able to bear life as a farmer's daughter in poverty—
her dreams and her heart beckon her to la linea.
Stealthily moving through the night, avoiding
being attacked or kidnapped by pistoleros, Juliana watches her daughter, holding Esperanza's hand tightly in hers.
They sleep under bushes until they enter the desert.

There they hide out under cactus and behind rocks.
Fear begins to take over Juliana. Unsure, knowing there's no going back and not knowing
what's ahead, she battles with her mind and her heart.
Her gait is off—lost a shoe—wobbling as she walks.
A tiny earthquake shakes inside.
Her fear talks to her. She begins to think they might vanish never heard of or seen again.

No! she shouts down the fear.
Dios, she commands, I don't know how to do this!
Get me and Esperanza across the desert and the border safely! Juliana says her prayer mantra in gratitude as if it has already occurred! The moon lights her way.
As she sleeps, her dreams are lucid. Waking each morning, Juliana has a clear vision of how to get to her next stopping place. Miraculously food and water last for days. She knows how to eat and drink from cactus.
As they walk, a cadence begins with earth and spirit.
They cross the border safely into the unknown—America!

Honorary Lifetime Gulf Coast Poets

Honorary Lifetime Members are individuals who have distinguished themselves in the field of poetry, and in the cause of poetry. Each is well-published. Many are award winning, most are teachers, workshop leaders, hosts of poetry readings, organizers of poetry festivals, or the like. We are very proud of our Honorary Lifetime Members, and honor them for their service. Each year, in the month of November, nominations are opened for a month to seek a new Honorary Lifetime Member. Nominations are accepted from any current member. To nominate a new Honorary Lifetime Member, contact the Gulf Coast Poets during November with a short biography of the proposed individual that includes publication and award data, and a few poems. This is our current list of Honorary Lifetime Members:

Treasurer Reports will normally end on the last day of the month preceding the meeting and cover the month(s) since the previous report.

One benefit of coming to our meetings is that attendees meet and network with our speakers, some of the best poets in Texas.

November's speaker is poet Erica Lehrer, an award-winning journalist and founding member of Net Poets Society (NetPoSo), a group of poets from Houston. Graduate of Princeton, and the N.Y.U. School of Law, Ms. Lehrer has studied at InPrint, Inc. with Dave Parsons (2011 Texas State Poet Laureate) and novelist Farnoosh Moshiri.

Leftovers

There's always a straggler, the cousin who will not leave, who wants what we have: a nucleus of brothers, sisters, parents and pets who can drape themselves over the furniture after the party ends and linger late into the night, talking about nothing, dozing off now and then, content to belong.

None of us can quite remember how we're related to this guest. Is he a second cousin? Third? More likely a cousin twice or thrice removed. Gentle hints of fatigue to no avail, we watch as he pours himself another drink, a tall one. We stopped drinking hours ago. "Why not stay over?" we finally ask. "It's a long way to Wimberley. We can continue over omelets and toast, fresh fruit, French Roast." We see him vacillating – yes, no, yes – 'til he shakes his head: "I'd better go...."

With hugs all around and vague promises to stay in touch, he's out the door in a sudden rush. We do not tarry, either, but peel off to our rooms to slump into the dreamless sleep of the overfed on Thanksgiving.
